

A Western Affair '10

Background Fact Sheet

Our Vision

Founded in 1998, California Rangeland Trust is a non-profit organization whose mission is to protect the state's working ranches, and the cultural and ecological values they provide. We work in three ways:

1. Partnering with ranchers, we provide tools and financial support for landowners who want to preserve the integrity of their ranches into the future against subdivision.
2. Informing policy-makers at every level about initiatives that will help ranching families, rural communities, wildlife, and the western way of life.
3. Working with non-ranching stakeholders – from universities to average citizens – we reach out and strengthen an ever-widening circle of rangeland supporters.

A History of Success

We've discovered that a highly voluntary, rancher-led approach to conservation is strong, effective and full of promise. To date, we've saved over 200,000 acres of California rangeland, and 500,000 acres awaits funding.

The Challenges We Face

As California's population hurtles toward 50 million by the year 2020, we continue to lose rangelands to development at an alarming rate. But look at all they give us:

- Thriving rural communities carrying on cowboy ways of life
- Open spaces that renew our spirits and fuel tourism
- Water quality capture and enhancement
- Corridors for wildlife movement and migration
- Habitat for a variety of common and threatened species
- A chance to discover our "inner buckeroo"

“The land does not belong to me. The land belongs to future generations...it’s one of the natural wonders. It’s there for humanity. And we dare not destroy it anymore than we’d cap the geysers in Yellowstone or put the Bridal Veil Falls of Yosemite in a pipe. I think we have a natural wonder here that I’ll do my best to preserve.”
